Andaman and Nicobar's masterstroke to boost eco-tourism

In a push to boost eco-tourism, the Andaman and Nicobar Islands' administration has launched a new initiative to promote birdwatching tourism, aiming to draw nature enthusiasts and raise public awareness about the islands' rich avian biodiversity.

The Andaman and Nicobar Islands administration has launched a new initiative to promote birdwatching tourism, aiming to draw nature enthusiasts and raise public awareness about the rich avian biodiversity found across the archipelago. As part of its eco-tourism campaign, a public lecture was held on July 26 in collaboration with the Avian Club of Andaman and Nicobar Islands. The event highlighted the ecological value of the islands' wildlife and their growing appeal to both domestic and international birdwatchers. "Andaman and Nicobar Islands are home to many endemic birds. The initiative has been taken to create awareness on the islands' rich avifauna diversity, potential of different segments of tourism, and to encourage responsible travel practices," said Tourism Secretary, Ms. Jyoti Kumari. She noted that the pristine forests, wetlands, and distinct island ecosystems make the territory ideal for eco-conscious travellers and bird lovers.

The lecture was delivered by ornithologist Arun Singh and President of the Avian Club. Singh has been a key figure in bird conservation efforts and promoting ecotourism in the region. "With over 30 endemic bird species, the Andaman Islands are rapidly emerging as a new hotspot for bird tourism. The archipelago is gaining international recognition among bird lovers and wildlife photographers. Since the COVID-19 pandemic, the number of birdwatchers and professionals visiting the islands has grown steadily," he said, according to PTI.

Among the standout species that draw birders to the region are the Andaman wood pigeon, the Andaman crane, and the Andaman serpent eagle. While Singh pointed to rarer species like the ruddy kingfisher, beach
