Health is paramount and priority concern; directly related to productivity of individual and society: VP

Commercialization and ethical dilution in medical profession is a cause of concern

New Delhi, Nov. 23 (PIB)

Highlighting the direct relation between health of an individual, productivity of the individual and the overall health of the society, Vice-President, Shri Jagdeep Dhankhar today said that, "Health is paramount and priority concern as good health is not only necessary for individual, not for our pursuits, but for the good health of the society. That broadly is also your theme. Friends, having good health is directly related to your productivity, as I said. If you are not healthy, your productivity will not be optimal. Rather than helping others, you might be seeking other's help."

Addressing the 64th convocation of National Academy of Medical Sciences (NAMS) at AIIMS Jodhpur, Shri Dhankhar expressed concern over the commercialization and ethical dilution in the medical profession. "Medical professionals serve as guardians and the role is all the more significant in Bharat that is home to one sixth of humanity. Your concern must be beyond clinical care. You have to be, and you have to engage in advocacy of good health. You have to become educators and public health advocates. But the challenges are there now in healthcare. The challenges are commercialization and ethical dilution is required to be addressed. Healthcare is a divine contribution. Healthcare is service. Healthcare has to be far distant from commerce, and health care is antithetical to exploitation", he added.

Underscoring the need of a healthy society to make 'Viksit Bharat at 2047', the Vice-President stressed, "We are having exponential economic upsurge and phenomenal infrastructure growth. In the last few years, this has made Bharat, which once was part of fragile five economies, as big five global economies, on the way to becoming the third largest global economy. But friends, this aspirational object, very ambitious, requires an 8 fold increase in our per capita income, and this takes me to something which is of your interest. This is attainable only with our population being healthy and fit. One may be committed, sincere, earnest, gifted, devoted, but if that person is not physically healthy, rather than helping the society at large with his dedication and expertise, he will be seeking help. And therefore it is essential that everyone in the country remains healthy".

biodiversity of these Islands is not just a scientific or environmental marvel but also is a source of life, livelihood and inspiration. The Chief Secretary said, the responsibility lies with all of us to conserve and preserve this richness for future generations. This training workshop is invaluable because they not only impart knowledge but also cultivate a deeper appreciation for the ecosystems that surround us. He also highlighted the remarkable biodiversity of these Islands, from rich marine ecosystems to endemic species of birds and turtles. The species like Nicobar Pigeons, Nicobar Megapode, Narcondam Hornbill and Leatherback Sea Turtle are not only ecological treasures but also significant attractions for niche tourism. Birdwatchers and nature enthusiasts from around the world are eager to experience the uniqueness of these Islands.

The Chief Secretary further remarked that the unveiling of the bird policy for the Andaman and Nicobar Islands marked a significant step towards structured conservation. This is the first bird policy in the entire country, a visionary approach to preserving and promoting our avian diversity. He said, for biodiversity conservation to succeed, it must translate into tangible economic benefits for the local population.

Dr. S. Dinesh Kannan in his address highlighted the two aspects of the workshops; first and foremost, the selection of the target audience was exemplary. The workshop was primarily dedicated to students and teachers, an audience that is pivotal in disseminating knowledge and creating awareness about biodiversity conservation. Students and teachers serve as catalysts of change, and empowering them with accurate and practical knowledge ensures the spread of environmental awareness across generations. Secondly, the methodology of this program deserves special mention. The combination of classroom sessions with field visits provided participants a comprehensive understanding of biodiversity.

Captain P. Mahajan congratulated ZSI for organizing such an impactful program and for their unwavering commitment in empowering participants with the knowledge and tools needed to protect these ecosystems. Understanding ecosystem is essential for maintaining a delicate balance of life on Earth, and ensuring the sustainability of natural resources. He also mentioned the collaboration of INS Utkrish with ZSI in studying the ecosystems that exist within airports. The objective was not only to preserve these ecosystems as they are but to make them non-conducive for birds and other wildlife because their presence poses significant risks to flight safety. This involves identifying the environmental factors that attract birds to such locations and then altering those factors carefully.

Earlier, Dr. Sivaperuman, Course co-ordinator and Officer-in-Charge, ZSI, in his welcome address, presented the objective of the training workshop. He also highlighted the role of Zoological Survey of India, Andaman and Nicobar Regional Centre in organizing various levels of training courses. The chief guest and special guests distributed the certificates to the participants.
