Development of Andaman and Nicobar Islands: Strategic comfort for India

The 1,000th anniversary of Rajendra Chola's famous naval trip to the Srivijaya Empire is being commemorated in the nation this year - 2025. The imperative question here is whether the Chola's historic journey to Srivijaya would have been possible if the strategic significance of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands had not been realised by the Chola King. As some historical evidence suggests, the islands of Andaman and Nicobar, positioned along the Indian Ocean trade routes, have been used to station naval forces, providing a launch point for Rajendra Chola's fleet during their mission to Srivijaya - present day Indonesia. Moreover, in the latter half of the eighteenth century, after realising the strategic significance of these islands for monitoring trade, projecting power into Southeast Asia, and pursuing other colonial interests, the British began acquiring a number of islands in the Andaman and Nicobar regions. The British were intended to establish a permanent naval base there, but despite their best efforts, they remained unsuccessful in doing so; ultimately, they converted the islands into a penal colony. Even the Japanese presence in the Andaman and Nicobar Islands for a brief period during World War II was largely influenced by her strategic and security concerns. While discussing and arguing the strategic importance of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, the famous Indian naval strategist, diplomat, and scholar KM Panikar's advocacy for a strategy in which island chains serve as bases for the projection of naval power must be revisited. Panikkar's book "India and the Indian Ocean: An Essay on the Influence of Sea Power on Indian History," published in 1945 just before the independence, makes a compelling case for why India's own island development is essential to its naval strategy, national security, economic interests, and regional influence.

C Raja Mohan, an academic and leading foreign policy analyst, in his book Samudra Manthan: Sino-Indian Rivalry in the Indo-Pacific, argued that "Amid debates on the transfer of power and the interests of the Admiralty in London to retain control over Andaman and Nicobar as well as other islands of the Indian Ocean, there were little awareness in New Delhi about the importance of the island territories. It was Viceroy Mountbatten who insisted on retaining the islands with India and proposed negotiations with it over British use."

Finally, Government decided to move on with the establishment of a tri-service command in Andaman & Nicobar. Now, following years of steady progress in building both military and non-military infrastructure throughout the archipelago, the islands are ready to take off with the Rs. 72000 Great Nicobar Island Project-a strategic economics and development multiplier project for the holistic development of the Andaman and Nicobar Islands.

There is something beyond ensuring security and projecting naval power, as this project is a maritime endeavour instead of naval only. In addition to security endeavours, the project will have a bearing on economics, regional trade, freedom of navigation, India's Act East policy, multilateralism, and our vision of shared prosperity, either directly or indirectly. The mega maritime hub-a concoction of naval and development projects-located only about 80 nautical miles off the coast of Indonesia and about 770 miles from the strategically significant Malacca Straits, will provide an ideal balance of strategic comfort for India.

The US interests in strategic St Martin's Island in the Bay of Bengal, the UK-Mauritius long spat for sovereignty over the Chagos Islands, and China's prioritisation of the development of its woody island in the South China Sea for its own strategic interests are recent intriguing examples of the role of islands in regional or global strategic manoeuvrings. There is a shift in approach now; not only the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, but also the Lakshadweep Islands are being viewed as "islands of opportunity" to enhance India's economic and strategic clout in the region. Indeed, the change in approach towards our islands is a reflection of India's changed outlook towards the Indian Ocean region-revolving around India's vision of SAGAR-Security and Growth for All in the Region, unveiled by PM Modi in 2015. Satellite Internet in India

The Future of Internet Above Us

India's progress in space is now directly contributing to making the lives of ordinary citizens easier.

- Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi

Introduction

India is one of the fastest-growing digital nations in the world, with internet connectivity playing a crucial role in its progress. This momentum is reflected in the staggering 1,002.85 million internet subscribers reported during April-June 2025, highlighting the scale and impact of India's digital revolution. However, internet penetration remains limited in certain regions of the country, underscoring the need for satellite internet to complement existing networks.

Satellite internet refers to the internet service provided through satellites placed in Geostationary Orbits (GSO) or Non-Geostationary Orbits (NGSO).

For realising the Digital India vision of a digitally inclusive nation, satellite internet is an emerging technology with the potential to provide connectivity from space to any location. This makes it particularly valuable for remote villages, hilly terrains, border areas, and islands where terrestrial internet services are either difficult to reach or economically unviable.

India's Regulatory Landscape for Satellite Internet

The government has introduced a progressive regulatory framework to govern Satellite Communications (Satcom), aiming to balance innovation with security and spectrum management. Recent policy measures are shaping an environment for private participation, streamlined approvals, and efficient spectrum use, paving the way for large-scale adoption of satellite internet.

In 2020, the Government introduced Space Sector Reforms to open the doors for private sector participation in space activities. Building on this momentum, the Indian Space Policy, 2023 established a level playing field for Non-Government Entities (NGEs) in the space sector by enabling their participation across the entire value chain of space activities in an end-to-end manner.

Department of Telecommunications (DoT)

DoT regulates provision of satellite-based communication by granting authorisations under the Unified Licence Regime framework, enabling a range of satellite-based services such as Commercial VSAT CUG services, GMPCS (Global Mobile Personal Communication by Satellite), etc. These services are designed to complement terrestrial networks, extending connectivity to remote and unserved regions across the country. The Telecommunications Act, 2023 empowers the government to assign spectrum, enforce security conditions and, regulate satellite-based services as part of the broader telecom ecosystem.

Telecom Regulatory Authority of India (TRAI)

In May 2025, TRAI released its recommendations on the terms and conditions for the assignment of spectrum for satellite-based commercial communication services. To balance the regulatory framework with flexibility and efficiency in spectrum utilization. One of the key recommendations of TRAI is to assign the satellite spectrum for a period of five years, with the option to extend for up to two additional years based on market conditions.

Indian National Space Promotion & Authorisation Centre (IN-SPACe)

IN-SPACe plays a pivotal role in enabling satellite internet in India. It is responsible for promoting, authorizing and supervising various space activities of the non-governmental entities (NGEs). This nodal agency acts as an interface between ISRO and NGEs, facilitating the growth of space-based activities including the use of India's satellite resources for broadband connectivity. It also assesses the needs of private players, including educational and research institutions, as well as explores ways to accommodate these requirements in consultation with ISRO.

New Space India Ltd. (NSIL)

NSIL is a Central Public Sector Enterprise (CPSE) under the Department of Space. It is incorporated as the commercial arm of ISRO. NSIL is currently operating 15 in-orbit communication satellites and providing space-based communication services to various Indian users.

India's Transitioning Satcom Landscape

India's satellite communication (Satcom) ecosystem is undergoing a transformative shift. Traditionally dependent on the Geostationary Satellite (GSAT) of Indian Space Research Organisation's (ISRO) and other satellite operators' series, the sector is now witnessing more active private participation and the adoption of next-generation Low Earth Orbit (LEO) and Medium Earth Orbit (MEO) satellite systems. With the rollout of space sector reforms India is set to harness satellite internet as a key driver of Digital India.

Role of NSIL in Satellite Communications

⇒ NSIL plays a pivotal role in meeting India's satellite communication requirements through demand-driven missions and operational services. To address the national requirements in Satellite Communications, NSIL undertook two Demand-Driven Satellite Missions-

⇒ GSAT-N1 [GSAT-24] for Direct-To-Home (DTH) services, which has commenced its operational services.

⇒ GSAT-N2 [GSAT-20] for broadband connectivity which is currently undergoing in-orbit testing and commissioning operations.

⇒ NSIL has also proposed its 3rd Demand-Driven Satellite Mission, GSAT-N3 slated for Q1 2026 for the government's S-Band communication needs.

⇒ Satellite Band Services: Satellite communication services and other space services are managed by NSIL through its ISAT/GSAT satellites for extending multiple applications in S, C, Extended C, Ka and Ku bands.

Understanding the Satellite Communication Spectrum

In satellite communications, frequency bands serve as the essential channels through which voice, data, and broadband signals are transmitted between Earth and space. The popular frequency bands used for providing satellite communication services are:

Shift to LEO/MEO-based Satellite Internet Services

Driven by the need for lower latency, higher bandwidth, and more reliable coverage across remote and unserved regions, India is reimagining its satellite internet landscape from GEO (Geostationary Earth Orbit) satellites to LEO (Low Earth Orbit) and MEO (Medium Earth Orbit) systems. This transition will deliver faster and more reliable internet connectivity nationwide.

LEO satellites orbit close to Earth, typically between 400 to 2,000 km altitude. Their proximity allows for low-latency communication, making them ideal for internet services.

MEO satellites operate at altitudes ranging from 8,000 to 20,000 km. They cover larger regions than LEO satellites and have a slightly higher latency than LEO satellites.

Policy Reforms

With the rollout of space sector reforms, the government now permits up to 100% Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) in different segments of the space sector through automatic and government approval routes, thereby liberalising entry norms for private participation, marking the transition of India's satcom landscape.

Industry Developments

Marking a major step in strengthening the nation's digital connectivity landscape, Starlink Satellite Communications Pvt. Ltd. (SSCPL) in June 2025 received a license to launch satellite internet services in India. Prior to it, Jio Satellite Communication Limited and OneWeb India Communications Private Limited have been granted license for providing such services.

As of April 2025, more than 10 satellite operators have shown interest and applied for authorization to provide satellite capacity in India.

The entry of private-sector players in the space sector marks a significant step towards Viksit Bharat 2047, setting the stage for a seamless rollout of high-speed satellite broadband across the nation. The transitioning Satcom landscape underscores the government's focus on fostering innovation and next-generation technologies.

Government Initiatives: Expanding Inclusive Digital Connectivity

The government has launched several initiatives to extend mobile and internet connectivity to the nation's remotest areas, empowering individuals and communities alike. In today's digital era, such connectivity serves as a catalyst for socio-economic development, unlocking access to education, healthcare, and economic opportunities.

Digital Bharat Nidhi (DBN), formerly Universal Service Obligation Fund (USOF)

Under Digital Bharat Nidhi, the government is implementing various schemes for the expansion of broadband facilities through installation of 4G mobile towers in the rural and remote areas of the country under the 4G saturation project. Further, DBN has been instrumental in funding projects that extend mobile and broadband connectivity to underserved areas.

For Island Regions:

The government has implemented Comprehensive Telecom Development Plan (CTDP) for islands to provide connectivity to Andaman and Nicobar Islands and Lakshadweep. Satellite Bandwidth Augmentation executed by BSNL (Bharat Sanchar Nigam Limited) increased capacity from 2 Gbps to 4 Gbps in the Andaman & Nicobar Islands and from 318 Mbps to 1.71 Gbps in Lakshadweep. This satellite boost supplements fibre cables to ensure resilient telecom service coverage across the islands.

For North-Eastern Regions:

The government has implemented CTDP for providing mobile connectivity to villages and areas along National Highways with the objective of extending mobile network access to underserved population. As of June 2025, 2,485 mobile towers have been commissioned, providing mobile connectivity to 3,389 locations.

National Broadband Mission 2.0 (NBM 2.0)

NBM 2.0 was launched on January 17, 2025, after the successful completion of NBM 1.0 with the goal of extending broadband services to the remaining 1.7 lakh villages across the country. The NBM 2.0 aims to propel India into a new era of digital transformation and global competitiveness aligning with the vision of Viksit Bharat. Key components under NBM 2.0 are:

BharatNet Project:

Funded under DBN, BharatNet is an ambitious project aimed at providing affordable high-speed internet access to every Gram Panchayat in the country, bridging the gap between urban and rural communities. The satellite component of this project is being implemented by BBNL (Bharat Broadband Network Limited) and BSNL under Phase II. So far, over 2.14 lakh Gram Panchayats are connected through the BharatNet project, with BSNL covering 1,408 and BBNL covering 3,753 of them.

Prime Minister Wi-Fi Access Network Interface (PM-WANI):

PM-WANI is designed to create a network of public Wi-Fi hotspots across India. It aims to make affordable and reliable internet access available to citizens, fostering digital participation and economic opportunities. More than 3.73 lakh PM-WANI Wi-Fi hotspots have been installed in the country, as of September 2025.

The Ministry of Earth Sciences (MoES) has developed a Geographic Information System (GIS)-based Decision Support System (DSS). It uses internet connectivity to deliver timely and impact-based early warnings for extreme weather events. The system relies on historical data, real-time observations, radar, and satellite imagery. It helps disaster-prone states monitor risks and take measures to protect lives, livelihoods, and infrastructure.

Together, these efforts underscore India's commitment to employing satellite communication to strengthen digital infrastructure and improve public services.

India's Key Broadband-Based Satellites

India's broadband reach is steadily expanding through high-throughput satellites (HTS) developed by ISRO, which use advanced spot-beam technology to provide faster speeds and higher capacity. India has a fleet of 19 operational communication satellites, among which GSAT-19, GSAT-29, GSAT-11, and GSAT-N2 are specifically geared towards boosting India's broadband services. These satellites are designed to enhance internet connectivity in underserved areas, support in-flight communication, defence networks and disaster management. Together, they form the backbone of satellite-based broadband infrastructure in India, complementing ground-based networks like BharatNet.

Conclusion

In line with the vision of Viksit Bharat 2047, satellite internet is emerging as a key enabler of digital connectivity, extending reliable access to remote and underserved regions, while strengthening critical applications in defence and disaster response. Through the power of space technology, India is reinforcing its strategic autonomy and leadership in space-based communications, ensuring that the benefits of connectivity reach every citizen. From operationalising HTS to enabling private participation in satellite communications, the country is steadily bridging its digital divide. (Source:PIB)
